8 THE COURT: Good morning, counsel. Who is on 9 the line for plaintiff, please?

10 MR. BRAUERMAN: Good morning, Your Honor. This 11 is Steve Brauerman from Bayard. I am joined on the line by 12 my colleagues Francis Villegas and Joyce Kohn from Cohen &
13 Gresser in New York.

14 THE COURT: Good morning. Let's go through the 15 defendants.

16 MR. BLUMENFELD: Good morning, Your Honor. Jack
17 Blumenfeld. I am on for the Comcast, Cox, and CSC
18 defendants, along with Krishan Padmanabhan from Winston & 19 Strawn.

20 THE COURT: Good morning.

21 MS. FARNAN: Good morning, Your Honor. Kelly
22 Farnan at Richards, Layton & Finger. I am on for Time
23 Warner Cable. I have my co-counsel, Dan Reisner, from Kaye
24 Scholer in New York on the line.

25 MS. MAGUIRE: Good morning, Your Honor. Lauren

1 Maguire from Ashby & Geddes for the Turner defendants. With 2 me is Ben Horton from Marshall Gerstein.

3 THE COURT: Good morning.

4 Is that it? Okay.

I have received your letter. Correct me if I am wrong. It seems that the essence of the dispute is that the plaintiff wants to exclude post-grant proceedings from the bar and the defendant wants to include them. Is that an accurate statement?

10 MS. KUNG: Your Honor, Joyce Kung for AIP.

11 That's correct, Your Honor.

12 THE COURT: I wasn't inviting additional 13 comment. I just want a yes or no as to whether the parties 14 agree that that is the issue?

15 Let me ask this: Who is going to speak on 16 behalf of the defendants?

17                           MR. BLUMENFELD: Your Honor, Jack Blumenfeld. I 18 am going to speak on behalf of the defendants. That is an 19 issue. I think there is a second issue as well.

20 THE COURT: We will get to that in a moment,
21 because, as I understood it, the one paragraph in contention 22 is Paragraph 17. Is that correct?

MR. BLUMENFELD: That is correct. Your Honor.

24 THE COURT: The way I read the difference is 25 that the plaintiff wants to exclude from the bar post-grant

1       matters like inter partes review, reexaminations and like, 2       and the defendant wants to include those. If there is 3       something else there that I have missed, we can get to that 4       in a moment.

5                  Does the plaintiff agree or disagree -- do you
6       agree with Mr. Blumenfeld that there is an additional issue 7       other than the one as I have articulated it?

8                  MS. KUNG: We believe the only dispute is 9       Paragraph 17, Your Honor.

10                 THE COURT: Who is going to speak for the 11      plaintiff on this?

12                 MS. KUNG: Primarily myself, Joyce Kung.

13                 THE COURT: For the plaintiff, I think I saw you 14      take the position or see you taking the position that 15      essentially no bar is needed at all. Is that correct?

16                 MS. KUNG: That's correct, Your Honor.

17                 THE COURT: I am going to want to ask to ask 18      you, why does it matter? Why are we on the phone? And then 19      as to the defendants, isn't the plaintiff a non-practicing 20      entity?

21                 MR. BLUMENFELD: Yes, Your Honor. As far as we 22      know, the plaintiff is a non-practicing entity.

23                 THE COURT: They are organized just to enforce 24      patent rights. Right? They don't make or do anything, they 25      don't prosecute applications. They just enforce patent

1       rights. Is that correct?

2                   MR. BLUMENFELD: Well, they prosecute patent
3       applications, Your Honor. They don't make products.

4                   THE COURT: So they do prosecute patent 5       applications in the various fields that are at issue?

6                   MR. BLUMENFELD: Yes. In fact, there is a 7       continuation application of two of the patents in suit that 8       is pending. And there is an inter partes review of one of 9       the patents in suit that is pending.

10                  THE COURT: That answers that question for me.

11                  Back to the plaintiff. Why do you care? If a 12       bar is not needed at all, what does it matter?

13                  MS. KUNG: We agree. We agree we do not need a 14       bar.

15                  THE COURT: Then why do you care what the 16       defendant proposes? Why don't you accept the defendants' 17       proposal, in other words?

18                  Maybe it's Tuesday and I am not being very 19       clear.

20                  MS. KUNG: Sure. If the Court does believe that 21       a prosecution bar is necessary, we believe that 22       participation in IPR should be excluded and that it should 23       also apply equally to both sides.

24                  THE COURT: Why?

25                  MS. KUNG: In terms of applying equally, for a

1 prosecution bar not to apply equally in this case would 2 simply be unfair in finding that either one side's attorney 3 are less trustworthy or that one side's confidential
4 materials are less valuable. AIP is actually not a,
5 quote-unquote, patent troll. AIP is part --

6 THE COURT: I didn't use that language.

7 MS. KUNG: AIP's predecessors companies and the 8 inventor of the patent in suit, Mr. Mishinsky, do have a 9 long history of commercializing their technologies. The 10 '879 patent, for example, discloses embodiments of the 11 invention that were actually built and used in the industry.
12 Mr. Mishinsky continues to be active in the industry, and he 13 also continues to grow his own portfolio of business.

14 This is not just an inventor company that only 15 asserts patents.

16 We believe that discovery will require that AIP 17 produce confidential proprietary information that is 18 potentially trade secrets. While these materials might date 19 back as far as the mid-nineties, much has not been publicly 20 disclosed. Defendants might claim that because AIP's 21 information is, quote-unquote, old and therefore less 22 valuable, I think the saying goes, if I have seen farther, 23 it's from standing on the shoulders of giants. That is new 24 inventions and patent applications, new innovations, they 25 all stand on information and developments of the past.

1                   We know that several defendants have large,
2 well-established patent programs.

3                   So AIP faces the same risks that defendants 4 face. We stand to lose just as much as they do if we are to 5 believe that there is some inherent risk of inadvertent 6 disclosure. It is not the type of case where plaintiff only 7 has a prosecution history to produce. There'll be research 8 and development, schematics, those documents, materials 9 showing the design process that resulted in actual hardware.

10                  For defendants to say that the prosecution bar 11 only needs to be one way seems unfair, that is, that our 12 technology is somehow less valuable, less important or less 13 worthy of protection than defendants'.

14                  Do you want me to go on about participation in 15 IPR?

16                  THE COURT: Why don't you finish your argument, 17 then I will hear from the other side.

18                  MS. KUNG: Sure. Thank you.

19                  So we believe that if a prosecution bar is 20 necessary, that participation in inter partes reexam be 21 excepted from the bar. This is an approach that has been 22 taken in Delaware cases, such as Xerox versus Google and 23 Kenexa versus Paleo. In Kenexa the Court explained that the 24 scope of the claims can't be enlarged by amendment interview 25 exams because reexam involves only the patents and the prior

1       art. The defendants' confidential information is basically 2       irrelevant to the reexam.

3                  Here, where Level 3 instituted IPR, because the 4       cases are related, we believe that Kenexa's statement that 5       the reexam is part and parcel of the instant cases is 6       applicable. This is not a situation where new information 7       can be added to broaden the claims. This isn't a situation 8       where broadening of the claims can happen, period.

9                  The Xerox case explains, amendments made during 10      reexam can only serve to narrow the original claims. No 11      product that did not infringe a patent before reexamination 12      could ever infringe that patent following reexamination.

13                 So furthermore, to the extent additional details 14      are added to a claim in reexam to distinguish from the prior 15      art, those details must already exist in the original patent 16      specification.

17                 In addition, Xerox acknowledged that a parallel 18      reexam may not be formally part of the litigation. Choices 19      made before the PTO nonetheless have consequences which are 20      important. The validity of reexamined claims ultimately 21      have to be explained to defendants before a jury. Xerox 22      recognized that trial counsel are better suited to address 23      claim language to this end than reexam counsel. And, 24      moreover, because reexam, and especially inter partes
25      reexam, is an increasingly important venue for challenging

1       patent validity, preventing trial counsel from confidential
2       information, from fully participating in reexam, would force 3       the plaintiff to split its resources between two fronts in 4       essentially the same war.

5                     THE COURT: Okay. Are you at the end?

6                     MS. KUNG: I am. Thank you, Your Honor.

7                     THE COURT: Who authored the Xerox opinion?

8                     MS. KUNG: I apologize?

9                     THE COURT: Who authored the Xerox opinion?

10                    MS. KUNG: I believe it was Judge Robinson.

11                    THE COURT: What have you been able to find from 12                    this Judge on this particular issue?

13                    MS. KUNG: From Judge Robinson? I apologize.

14                    THE COURT: This Judge, the Judge who is on the 15                    line with you.

16                    MS. KUNG: In Re Bear Creek, and also, I 17                    believe, in Edwards LifeSciences.

18                    THE COURT: What did I say there?

19                    MS. KUNG: Well, I believe in those cases 20                    prosecution bars were already in place. The parties who did 21                    not want a prosecution bar were trying to get a second bite 22                    at an apple. But in those cases we do acknowledge that you 23                    did find for the defendant.

24                    THE COURT: All right. Mr. Blumenfeld.

25                    MR. BLUMENFELD: Your Honor, I am going to skip

1       pretty quickly by whether there should be a bar, because 2       there is ongoing patent activity and the defendants have 3       produced thousands of pages of confidential documents.

4                   I don't think there is any question about that.

5                   On the question that Your Honor just asked about 6       the decisions, I think the only two I know of from Your 7       Honor are the Edwards and Bear Creek decisions. Clearly, in 8       Edwards, you held that prosecution, as it was defined in the 9       protective order, included reexamination. And in Bear 10      Creek, you also applied a bar which included reexamination.
11      I think there was nothing peculiar about those cases that is 12      different from these cases.

13                  I think the point is that when you are before 14       the Patent Office, even in a reexamination, or in an IPR, 15       the claims can be amended. And that creates a high risk of 16       misuse of the defendants' confidential information, and it 17       involves, as the In Re Deutsche Bank case says, competitive 18       decision-making because it permits the patentee to seek to 19       amend its claims or in some instances draft new claims to 20       try to capture what it knows from confidential documents the 21       defendant is doing but trying to avoid the prior art. And 22       that is a huge competitive advantage to have, if trial 23       counsel can get the documents for purposes of litigation and 24       then use them to craft claims of that sort that capture what 25       the defendants are doing and what it has only learned the 1       defendants are doing through the litigation.

2                  As to whether the bar should be unilateral or 3                   bilateral, it has nothing to do with whether the defendants' 4                   attorneys are more trustworthy than the plaintiff's 5                   attorneys. It has to do with two things, I think. One is 6                   the confidential information being disclosed by the parties, 7                   and second, the risk that it can be misused on one side 8                   versus the other.

9                   Notwithstanding what plaintiff's counsel said, 10                  they alleged in their complaint that AIP required the patent 11                  portfolio, patent applications in 2010. That's what they 12                  own. I was a little surprised to hear what was said, 13                  because they have told us in the meet-and-confers that their 14                  confidential documents are the 1994 invention type documents 15                  they are talking about. It's hard to imagine how anyone 16                  could misuse 20-year-old documents on patents that have 17                  already issued or are in prosecution against the patentee.

18                  And so we haven't heard anything about any 19                  confidential information of AIP that could be used here.
20                  And as far as we know, they are a holding company with no 21                  products and no product developments. They bought these 22                  patents to assert them. The notion that a predecessor 23                  company, which I think is what plaintiff's counsel called 24                  them, may be developing products is nice, but it has nothing 25                  to do with any ability of the defendants to be able to 1       prosecute any patent applications to use against the 2       plaintiff, because they are just wondering if there is any 3       confidential information of that sort, and, two, there 4       aren't any products.

5                  We can't, even if we wanted to, use information 6       to get patents to assert against a non-practicing entity.

7                  We don't see any reason why there should be a 8       two-way bar when there is no serious, real risk that the 9       defendants' counsel could misuse the information in 10      prosecution.

11                 THE COURT: So as to your analysis of the cases 12       that have been discussed here, what I believe I hear you to 13       say, Mr. Blumenfeld, is that you don't see any reason to 14       distinguish the two cases that I decided from the facts in 15       this case, anything that distinguishes this case from those?

16                 MR. BLUMENFELD: I don't know anything. I 17       argued the Edwards case before Your Honor. I don't know of 18       any difference. The only difference that I know of is that 19       in that case we already had a protective order in place. It 20       just said "prosecution." We came back to you on that issue, 21       and Your Honor held, I believe, that prosecution included 22       reexamination. And there is good reason for that, because a 23       reexamination includes prosecution. It includes continued 24       prosecution of the application.

25                 So I don't see how that is any different.

1                   In Bear Creek, I think Your Honor acknowledged 2 that strategically amending or surrendering claim scope 3 implicates competitive decision-making, which is a good 4 reason why the bar ought to apply in post-grant proceedings 5 as well as in original prosecution.

6                   THE COURT: That is my recollection as well, Mr.
7 Blumenfeld.

8                   Ms. Kung, I am curious as to why you wouldn't 9 address those cases and rather suggest that I should go off 10 and follow another case that is only persuasive at best. It 11 is a colleague on the same level as me. It's not a Circuit 12 opinion. I tend to agree with Mr. Blumenfeld that -- I 13 confess, I don't have perfect recall of those facts and 14 circumstances. But I believe he correctly recounts the 15 posture of the case and my holding.

16                  I am a little at sea as to why you wouldn't have 17 discussed those and tried to distinguish these circumstances 18 or this circumstance from those, because you clearly know 19 how I held.

20                  MS. KUNG: Thank you, Your Honor.

21                  We believe that these cases were distinguishable
22 because the parties in Bear Creek and Edwards LifeSciences 23 already had protective orders with prosecution bars in 24 place. At that stage, whichever party had sought the first 25 prosecution bar had already met its burden of showing good

1 cause for such prosecution bar.

2 For example, in Bear Creek, the prosecution bar 3 was agreed to in the Eastern District of Virginia and had 4 already been in place. And in those cases, again, the 5 parties that were unhappy with the hands they were dealt --

6 THE COURT: But wasn't I looking at the 7 situation independently, independent of the finding by the 8 District Judge? That was a different case. Wherever it 9 was -- I understand your point. Go ahead. Let me let you 10 finish.

11 MS. KUNG: Well, in at least Bear Creek, counsel 12 for which the parties sought admitted that he would also be 13 participating in amending claims, which we do not believe 14 would be the case here.

15 THE COURT: So, Mr. Blumenfeld, you have heard 16 those two attempts at distinguishing those decisions. What 17 is your reaction?

18 MR. BLUMENFELD: Your Honor, I still see no
19 basis to distinguish them. The fact that a protective order 20 was already in place may be true. But in both of those 21 cases, at least as I understood what Your Honor was doing, 22 you were ruling that there was a substantial risk of misuse 23 of the defendants' information in reexamination post-grant 24 review proceedings. And you wouldn't permit that.

25 The fact that there was already a protective

1       order in place, which didn't address reexamination, and Your 2       Honor found it included reexamination because of that risk 3       in Edwards, I think is pretty compelling here.

4                   I am looking at the Bear Creek decision now. I 5       think Your Honor said twice that you agreed that 6       reexamination is going to involve decision-making even 7       though claim scope can't be broadened in those proceedings, 8       citing the Federal Circuit's decision in the In Re Deutsche 9       Bank case.

10                  I am having a lot of trouble seeing what 11       meaningful distinction there is in those cases.

12                  THE COURT: I am, too, Ms. Kung. I am not 13       inclined to go in a different direction. There is nothing 14       about the presentation today that would cause me to do that.

15                  I am disinclined to your point of view, Ms.
16       Kung.

17                  Mr. Blumenfeld, you mentioned a second issue, 18       though. What is that?

19                  MR. BLUMENFELD: The second issue, Your Honor, 20       was just whether the bar should be unilateral or bilateral.

21                  THE COURT: Okay. Ms. Kung, do you want to 22       react to Mr. Blumenfeld's response to your fairness 23       argument?

24                  MS. KUNG: I would. Two small points. One 25       point being that in the related case in Level 3 the parties

1       were able to negotiate --

2                   THE COURT: Ms. Kung, we are beyond that. I 3 have ruled at least on that. I am still interested in 4 hearing you on the fairness point. You are not going to 5 change my mind as I have stated it thus far. I don't think 6 there is anything distinguishing or sufficiently 7 distinguishing regarding the posture, that is, that the bar 8 was already in place, or anything else.

9                   I think the underlying rationale that I 10 articulated stands equally in this case, regardless of what 11 my esteemed colleague, Judge Robinson, has said, I don't 12 know that actually she said anything different or that her 13 rationale or her approach to this is any different than 14 mine. But if it is, so be it.

15                  What about your reaction to Mr. Blumenfeld's 16 points in contrast to your points about fairness?

17                  MS. KUNG: In regards to fairness, I guess we 18 would be willing to offer to refrain from participating in 19 decisions related to making amendments in IPR or any 20 prosecutions, which, again, I understand, is something that 21 the Northern District of California follows. I know that is 22 not controlling. But we believe that might address the 23 defendants' concerns.

24                  THE COURT: Are you talking about the Northern 25 District of California rules?

1                   MS. KUNG: Not necessarily the rules, just 2 common practice with bars on participation with new claims 3 and amendments. But there is no prosecution bar when simply 4 defending against prior art.

5                   THE COURT: Mr. Blumenfeld?

6                   MR. BLUMENFELD: Your Honor, on the fairness
7 point, just two little things, then I will address the last 8 point.

9                   First, the plaintiff's counsel and the 10 defendants' counsel are in very different positions because 11 of the nature of the information that's being disclosed. On 12 the fairness point, I don't think I mentioned before, the 13 plaintiff has separate prosecution counsel, two firms, I 14 believe, one in the continuations and one in the IPR. So 15 it's not like there is some prejudice to them.

16                  The second point is that, on the last point that 17 was made, saying, well, we will refrain from decisions about 18 amendments, that is nice, but the whole point of these 19 protective orders is not that people will intentionally 20 violate them. It's that there is too high a risk of 21 inadvertent use of information. Once you have the 22 confidential information, to say, well, I won't directly be 23 involved in the decision-making doesn't really get you very 24 far if you are involved in the points up to that point. And 25 one of the Judges in the District of Delaware, I don't think

1       it was you, Your Honor, talked about how inadvertent use is 2       like the thief in the night. It really is. Once you know 3       it and once you are in that position, controlling how you 4       use it is just difficult, if not impossible, to do,
5       notwithstanding your best intents.

6                   THE COURT: I agree, Mr. Blumenfeld. Therefore, 7       counsel, I am going to accept and I am going to side with 8       the defendant on this. The language, both parties' language
9       is before me. I will direct that the defendants' proposal 10      be included, and let's consummate the confidentiality 11      agreement.

12                   Counsel, is there anything more?

13                   Okay, counsel. Have a good day. Take care.

14                   (Conference concluded at 11:00 a.m.)
